5.5.2017 It's not likely in my opinion. I'd be happy if you plan on being a doctor but also earn a paycheck.. I'd just want to do it out of my own love for it. I'm a trainee at an IT company I really enjoy my job and the work I do but I don't want to feel like I need to be "professional" in my career because I feel like a professional is someone who is already successful, that's not me. I enjoy the fact that I work for myself and have a flexible work schedule. That's something I don't have with my office job. I definitely do it. I love tech. I love working with my hands and I love writing software. I enjoy managing people. I love the idea of being able to work with someone and not have them do what I want or expect. I don't know, I want to do something in fashion, but I haven't really put any effort into researching anything. I like nothing better than having a job that lets me live in the country. So far, my job has enabled me to do just that. I'm not going to put any number down, but I know I love it. I enjoy going into work and getting to know the people I work with. I enjoy helping them and I like to hear and see that they are happy. I enjoy being challenged and I enjoy the personal gratification I receive. Well, it really doesn't matter that much to me. I'm going to be working in tech anyways. I am starting to think a career change to something more technical and artistic is my best option. I really enjoy learning different skills and taking on different challenges. I'm going to be a doctor in 5 years so right now I'm just hoping to help people learn new things. I was a teacher before I got laid off. I really enjoy being a teacher and helping the people around me. I'd like to be a pilot. 82157476af
